

“ Access to treatment, including medication, has been the cornerstone of my recovery. Limiting access limits my possibilities.”

Sherri Walton, Scottsdale, Arizona

Give People with Mental Illness and Addictions a Life

For the 57 million Americans who suffer from a mental illness or substance use condition, continued treatment and support is vital.

State policies that impede access to services and medications can lead to treatment disruptions with serious unintended consequences for individuals, families, and communities.

Untreated mental illnesses and addictions cut across budget lines —child welfare, Medicaid, criminal justice...

Despite raging economic turmoil, we can work together to preserve, strengthen, and expand the mental health and addictions treatment capacity in every state.

NATIONAL COUNCIL
FOR COMMUNITY BEHAVIORAL HEALTHCARE

Healthy Minds. Strong Communities.

www.TheNationalCouncil.org