Health Equity & Pregnant & Post-Partum People

Pregnant and postpartum people in the U.S. are significantly and increasingly vulnerable to mental health and substance use challenges.

- Due to inequities, pregnant and postpartum people of color experience an even higher prevalence of maternal mental health conditions relative to the entire population.
- Integrated models of care offer a more comprehensive approach to providing individuals and families with the continuum of care they need, addressing the unique needs of those in the perinatal period.
